

Introduction.

If we slide or try to slide a body over a surface the motion is resisted by a bonding between the body and the surface. This resistance is represented by a single force and is called friction.

The force of friction is parallel to the surface and opposite to the direction of intended motion